removing Coke machines from their unions. "UAW Local 22 President Phil King, who was present at the rally, informed us that his local told the Coca-Cola Co. that they would no longer be stocking Coke. Coca-Cola products in their vending machine. UAW Region 9A and Local 118 had earlier terminated their relationship with Coke.

We want our students to be aware that the union, school or other institution should be lending their good name and prestige to any company guilty of such anti-social, immoral and criminal conduct by serving as a marketplace for its products."

In a formal meeting on April 23 in Wilmington, Delaware, Rogers challenged Coca-Cola CEO Doug Daft and the Board of Directors to stop their campaign of terror against the workers in Colombia and other countries. Daft, in response to Rogers' statement, was arrested behind and attacked by six security guards, according to the rally's organizer, Maxine Nothnagel. Rogers introduced Ray Rogers, who described him as "one of the most courageous unionists I have ever met." Mr. Rogers was not in attendance at this meeting, but his statement, he was assaulted from behind and attacked by six security guards, arrested by the F.B.I. and released from the meeting. It is now clear that the consultancy of the security firm, Global Risk Services, Ltd., that was hired by the Coca-Cola Co., is responsible for its workers in Colombia and "fairly responsible for the campaign of terror against its workers."

The delegation's final report, released in April, said, "In short, Coca-Cola is complicit in human rights abuses of its workers in Colombia and "fairly responsible for the campaign of terror against its workers."

"Many thanks go out to Professor Mike White and the Organization Department for all they did."

"Many thanks go out to Professor Mike White and the Organization Department for all they did."